

BIRDS IN THE WORDS

Read these sentences carefully. A deadly menace lurks in all of them.
(The first has been found for you.)

Most rich people should spend at least half of their money on moats and fences to keep these things away from their mansions.

One of those lawn decorations might be an impostor. Keep watching!

Don't turn on the microwave oven. It's a trap!

If I can grab my scalpel, I can use it to scare that thing from the operating room.

That squawk might be a gleeful mother bird telling her chicks that she's caught a fresh human for them to eat.

Always velcro binoculars to your sweatshirt. If you can grab them quickly you might be able to spot an approaching menace before it's too late!

Something may have sprinkled deadly seeds onto your bun. Tingling sensations will let you know if your hamburger has been poisoned.

Unless your windows are shatterproof, inch toward the door, open it, and run!
